NDIS webinar - Let's talk about work - 21st February 2019

On February 21 2019, the NDIS had a webinar which discovered the future of work for our participants and providers.

There are lots of ways the NDIS can help you to plan for employment. Sometimes it can be just providing information about services available in the community, like Disability Employment Services (DES) or volunteering opportunities.

If you need a lot of help to understand what sort of work you might be good at, or if you are feeling unsure about whether you can work or not, the NDIS may be able to fund some supports and services to build on your skills as a first step.

Other NDIS funding can be used to set you on the employment pathway. For example, if you have community participation funding, think about choosing a provider who offers vocational activities - a provider who can give you opportunities to build skills important for employment, like catching public transport, meeting new people or learning how to manage your money.

Webinar: Self-management, 2 August 2018

Learn how self-managing your own funds gives you choice and control over what and who supports you.

The NDIA hosted a webinar on 2 August 2018 to talk about self-management.

A new self-management guide was launched on the day, providing more support for those who self-manage their plans, or answer some of the questions for people considering self-management.

The webinar gave participants, families and carers the opportunity to hear about self-management - how it works and the benefits - from families and people who are self-managing their NDIS plan.

The panel was facilitated by Matthew Wright and included Dr Sam Bennett, General Manager, Strategic Advisors and Research, Marita Walker, Branch Manager, Scheme Innovation, Jan Kruger, parent of Jack, NDIS Self-Managed Participant and Kristie McCarthy, NDIS Self-Managed Participant.
