6 September 2019

New information is available for health professionals who are referring children with developmental delay to the NDIS.

Developmental delay is when a child's development is not at the level expected for their age, and significantly impacts their ability to perform daily routines and activities.

Learn more about developmental delay and the NDIS, including:

- Early intervention requirements for children under 6 years of age
- When a NDIS plan is needed
- Diagnosis and supports
- Evidence for developmental delay

Visit the new page for Developmental delay for children under 6 years.

Related articles

CEO address to the Council for Economic Development of Australia

Date
14 February 2020
Category

- News

The age of children supported under the NDIS early childhood approach is changing

Date
19 May 2023

Children’s Expert Advisory Group meeting summary July 2026

Date

16 July 2026

Read more news