6 September 2019

New information is available for health professionals who are referring children with developmental delay to the NDIS.

Developmental delay is when a child's development is not at the level expected for their age, and significantly impacts their ability to perform daily routines and activities.

Learn more about developmental delay and the NDIS, including:

- Early intervention requirements for children under 6 years of age
- When a NDIS plan is needed
- Diagnosis and supports
- Evidence for developmental delay

Visit the new page for Developmental delay for children under 6 years.

Related articles

CEO address to the Council for Economic Development of Australia

Date 14 February 2020 Category

News

The age of children supported under the NDIS early childhood approach is changing

Date 19 May 2023

Children to get faster access to NDIS supports

Date 26 June 2019

Read more news

